No one could provide me with a simple checklist, much less offer direction concerning funding or training. A recent General Accounting Office report detailed the extent of this problem - compiling a list more than 100 pages long of programs that support emergency pre-paredness. At a minimum, the inventory of these programs must be consolidated into a more user-friendly form, with one agency responsible for coordination and budget formulation - perhaps the new Office of Homeland Security. HOMELAND DEFENSE BLOCK GRANT However, what is really needed is for this balkanized collection of programs to be completely overhauled and largely replaced. In its place, we need the equivalent of a Community Development Block Grant program for homeland security. Such an initiative - what I would call a Homeland Defense Block Grant - should be distributed based on a formula commensurate with security needs and a threat assessment of how vulnerable an area is. These funds should have some strings attached - they should be specifically targeted to emergency personnel, equipment, training and security-related capital expenses - to ensure the accountability that the Congress must demand in times of emergency. Their receipt should also be conditioned on the requirement that the receiving municipality or subdivision does not cut local investment in relevant law enforcement, emergency first response or public health agencies to backfill with federal dollars. There must be no shell game in local budgeting like we have seen at..
