Not illustrated. 1882 Excerpt: . . . baby in his hands; shocked at the common-place stupid answers I was forced in my orthodoxy to make him; shocked most of all when at last, because he would not have my stupid answers, he drove me into a corner and mercilessly held me down, and put to me a horribly plain question to which, with the lads clear eye upon me, I could not say Yes and would not say No: and there I stood before him dumb, dumb, dumb--disgracefully, idiotically dumb: I the primate of all England, the first ecclesiastic in the British Isles; and he a stripling of three-and-twenty, not yet in deacons orders; and he was strong and I was weak, and he was brave and I was a coward, and he was eloquent and I was a poor stammering shuffler--and why For no reason on earth except that these difficulties, perpetually evaded and never faced, have put us clergy into an utterly false position; and by Gods grace I, for one, will get out of it before another Ordination-time comes round. And what was the horribly plain question, if one may ask said the Archdeacon. Well, one must not ask, replied the Archbishop, smiling; at any rate not just at present. I may probably have to answer it in public at the Council. By that time I hope I shall have more fully made up my mind what answer to give. There must always be difficulties, observed the Canon, consolingly....
