Not illustrated. 1914 Excerpt: .a chimney, so she starts a fire in the stoves and places them in the open court of the house until the fire is well started and the charcoal has ceased giving out poisonous fumes, when she moves them into the kitchen, places them on the floor in a half circle around her, and either sitting on her heels or on a low block or stool, or cross-legged on a cushion, prepares the meal. A round board of some 20 inches in diameter and raised from the ground a few inches serves as a kitchen table. The bread is homemade, but baked in public ovens. The domes of these public ovens are built of a species of soft fireproof limestone, with a floor of neatly matched blocks of a harder kind of limestone. The fire is made of scrub-oak roots, olive wood, or thistles, and is kept burning at one side while the remainder of the floor is utilized for small loaves of bread and trays of savory dishes. The baker lights up the oven, to note the progress of baking, by throwing in from time to time a small handful of crushed olive seeds, which are the residue after making the olive oil. PORTABLE CLAY STOVES. allows the ashes to drop PUBLIC OVENS THE PETROLEUM STOVES. While in the larger cities the natives have, to a marked extent, copied foreign methods in many ways, and while European families use wood and coal ranges, the native...
