Reviews

A top quality publication along with the font used was intriguing to read. I really could comprehend everything using this written e book. Its been designed in an remarkably straightforward way and it is only after i finished reading through this publication by which basically altered me, modify the way i believe.

These two refracted rays cross each other at b and this is the position of the focus of the luminous point 1. It will be noticed that we can draw a ray from 1 through the point o which on prolonging meets the other two rays at b; that is, this ray is not refracted. The point o is called the nodal point and may be defined as a point in the lens of such a nature that a ray of light going towards it is not refracted in passing through the lens. If the position of the image of an object is desired, we proceed in the same manner as above. From Fig. 8 it will be seen that the image of a convex lens is a real and inverted image. All convex lenses do not have the same focal distance; that is, they do not have the same refractive power. The greater the optical density of a lens, the greater the refractive power. The density of a medium is called its index of refraction. Again two lenses of the same material and therefore of the same index of refraction, do not necessarily have the same power of refraction. This depends upon the degree of curvature, or, in better words, upon the radius of curvature; the shorter the radius, the greater the refractive power. Hence the law, the refractive power of a lens varies directly as the index of refraction...
