Credit is based on confidence; confidence in a man s resources and ability to pay, in his character and integrity; confidence in the stability of the locality in which he conducts his business, in the country itself; confidence in the strength of its government and the soundness of its finances. Credit-making is an estimate or opinion of future commercial conditions and of the ability and intention of business men to carry out their business contracts. The man who pays cash uses the profits made from past business conditions; the man who buys on credit anticipates the profits of the future; hence the man who sells on credit must foresee the business conditions which are to bring these profits. Credit-making can no longer be done on the old mathematical basis, nor with the old sweat-box methods. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
