For gracious sake! what s that racket? exclaimed Dick Rover, as he threw down the newspaper he was reading and leaped to his feet. Sounds to me as if there was a battle royal going on, returned his younger brother, Sam, who was at a desk in the library of the old farmhouse, writing a letter. It s those boys! exclaimed Tom Rover, as he tossed aside a copy of a comic paper which he had been looking over. I ll wager they re up to some mischief again. Well, if they are your boys, Tom, you mustn t find fault with them, answered Sam Rover, with a twinkle in his eye. If ever there were chips of the old block, your twins are It with a capital I. Humph! snorted Tom Rover. I don t think Andy and Randy are much ahead of your Fred when it comes to playing tricks, and I think Dick s Jack can hold up his end too. Never mind about that just now, broke in Dick Rover, hastily. Let s go out and see what those kids are up to. All right. But don t be too severe with em, pleaded Tom Rover. Remember, boys will be boys. That s true, Tom. But we ve got to take em in hand sooner or later, remonstrated his brother Sam. If we don t, they ll grow up the wildest bunch ever known. A number of cries of alarm and protest, mingled with fierce cheering, had reached the house from the garden just beyond the broad veranda. As the three Rover brothers hurried through the hallway and outside, the yelling and cheering...
